

What to Do Once You Have Filed the Motion

The motion to intervene must be sent to the applicant and to all parties in the proceeding. Contact for all parties can be found on the service list found at the Commission's website: <http://www.ferc.gov/docs-filing/eservice.asp>

Technically, in addition to e-filing your motion, you are supposed to email your motion to intervene on the pipeline company, though many people skip this step (These are the email addresses:

Jacquelyne_Rocan@kindermorgan.com; curt_moffatt@kindermorgan.com;
shannon_miller@kindermorgan.com; ben_carranza@kindermorgan.com)

Becoming a Party to the Proceedings

Two things can happen after an intervener files a motion:

1. No answer to motion is given by FERC within 25 days of filing, and an intervener automatically becomes a party
2. An answer in opposition is given by FERC within 15 days of filing the motion. An intervener is not a party until the motion is expressly granted
